Question 1

After finishing the CP Micro test I was given a type 6 personality and even though there are aspects of this type that I agree with (analytical thinking, detecting threats to my safety), majority of the description isn't really how I view my own personality. I believe I am more of a type 5 which aligns with the second Enneagram test that I took which I believe gave me a more accurate ready and more in-depth questions. I believe I am quite an introverted person with a very limited social battery and I really appreciate my personal space and being by myself, I am not an overly emotional person and prefer to think more analytically rather than emotionally.

Question 2

Even though the Enneagram and CP Micro tests were insightful and had a good amount of accuracy, they didn't bring anything new to light about myself that I didn't already know or agree with, this test does make sense to me as being a type 5 I often have a lot of time to myself and do a lot of self-reflection which has helped a lot in knowing and understanding myself better.
